B. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE HOST COUNTRY

BELGIUM/BELGIQUE

B1. ABOUT BELGIUM

The Kingdom of Belgium, a country between France, Germany and Netherlands, is one of founding member of the European Union.

Belgium covers an area of 30.528 square kilometres and has a population of about 11 millions people. His capital is Brussels who is also the EU's Capital.

The name "Belgium" is driven from Gallia Belgica, a Roman province in the northernmost part of Gaul that before Roman invasion in 100BC and was inhabited by the Belgae (a mix of Celtic and Germanic peoples).

It's in 1830 the country borned during a revolution when Belgium seceded from the Netherlands and created the Kingdom of Belgium under the King Leopold I on 21th July 1831.

Upon its independence, Belgium participated in the Industrial Revolution and, during the course of the 20th century, possessed a number of colonies in Africa.

Today, our country still have a King (Philippe I) but he is now more a symbol of Belgium with limited prerogatives than a symbol of power. Our country has two main linguistic groups:

Dutch Speaking (Flemish community)
French Speaking (Walloon community)

But we have also a small group of German-speakers who are officially recognized.

History and Generality

« Horum omnium fortissimi sunt Belgae » (Of all these, the Belgae are the bravest), this is how Julius Caesar was describing the tribes encountered in Belgica during his Bellum Gallicum, his conquest of Gaul. One must said that Belgium, with her rich soil, her moderate climate and her friendly ecosystem, has always been inhabited by the Neanderthal man, whose traces, dating from 500,000 BCN, have been discovered there, or by his neighbor the Homo Sapiens. Both of them had found there a favorable area for installation.

When Jules, as the cartoon heroes Asterix and Obelix friendly call the general, conquered the Gaul and the land of Belgium, he integrated her current territory into the roman province of Gallia Belgica. Thus creating, for the first time ever, an official district called Belgium, located at the crossroad of the Roman Republic and Germany, between the Latin culture and the German one.

The Barbarian Invasions placed the Belgian's territory in the hands of the Franks, first the Merovingians, then the Carolingians – the region of Liege has always been known for being the possible birthplace of Charlemagne - before being partially incorporated to the Duchy of Burgundy, to the Spanish Netherlands, the Austrian ones, to the French Republic and, finally, to the United Kingdom of the Netherlands, a buffer state inherited from the Napoleonic wars.

The Kingdom of Belgium was born on september 24th, 1830, after the Belgian Revolution which turned the southern provinces from the United Kingdom of the Netherlands into an independent state. With Leopold the 1st as head of this new country, Belgium quickly became an important land in this post-Napoleonic Europe. With real industrial power at that time, the little Belgium even became a true colonial power when the Congolese territory was given to her as a gift from her own king Leopold II.

Two world wars later, the Kingdom of Belgium is not this little buffer land anymore, nor is it meant to soften relationships between the greats of Europe. It is a proud nation, dynamic, diverse and multicultural. Founding member of the European Union, whose capital is Brussels, Belgium is a multilingual country, as a result of its location at the crossroad of Latin and Germanic civilizations. The north part of the country, Flanders, speaks Dutch. The south, Wallonia, is of French language. And people living in the eastern part of the country, next to Germany, speak German. There are approximately eleven million inhabitants in Belgium, and its biggest cities are Brussels, Bruges, Antwerp, Liège and Charleroi.

Even though Belgium has received a lot of attention these last years, because of her political problems, no one should forget that its national motto is « Strength through Unity »... From now on, it will only be for cultural and sport matters that Europe will be hearing – in a good way - from its capital!

A word about Belgium's culture

Belgium's geographic situation, at the crossroad of all these civilizations, and with Brussels as an essential crossing point of the continent, makes it an incredibly rich country regarding culture. Painting, music, drawing, a Belgian will always have an opinion about it. Here are some examples :

The Great Jacques, as he is still called in Belgium. The master of Belgian music, able to sing both in French and in Dutch. Witness and symbol of a certain Belgium, he was also the author of the classic songs « Le port d'Amsterdam », « Vesoul » or « Ne me quitte pas ».

Stromae (1985 -)

Sometimes called the New Jacques Brel, the Brusseleir is the new hype made in Belgium, acclaimed from Brussels to New-York. His hits « Alors on danse », « Formidable » or « Papaoutai » will make you sketter the dancefloor.

B2. ABOUT LIEGE

Liège, also called Lîdje in Walloon, Luik in Dutch and Lüttich in German, is a french-speaking city from the east of Belgium, with a population of 200 000 inhabitants, called Liégeois. It is one of the main cities of Belgium, but also one of the most influential, both culturally and economically. From a historical perspective, Liège was, for a long time, one of the most important urban centers in Europe. Its nickname is « The Ardent City ».

History

Although the human presence in the area of Liège dates back to the prehistoric era, the premises of its greatness are located in the Middle-Ages, since part of the Merovingian and Carolingian dynasties is native of the Liège area (so is Pepin of Herstal, father of Charles Martel and great-grandfather of Charlemagne).

Even though the region had actually been occupied for a long time, it is towards 700 PCN that the foundation of the city as such, is commonly placed, when Saint Lambert, bishop of the diocese of Tongeren-Maastricht, was murdered in Liège. Following this event, the Ardent City became the seat of the diocese and an important place of pilgrimage. The original village was then transformed into a powerful and prestigious independent city ruled by a Prince-Bishop.

This power took the form of an independent principality around the year 980. This city-state was led by a Prince-Bishop, and the first one was known as Notger. During this time, the city and its region managed to maintain their relative independence until 1975, making Liège one of the strongest cities of the Middle Ages.

Liège quickly became an European economic and industrial site. Linked to the Holy Roman Empire, with a culture close to the French one and contiguous to the Netherlands, the Principality of Liège was a true peculiarity in the territorial history of the old continent. As a symbol of that power, its cathedral, the Saint Lambert Cathedral, was one of the biggest of all Europe.

Number of powerful people back then came to Liège, either to escape the French policy or to benefit from the convenient location and politics of the city.

After eight centuries of existence, the Principality of Liège, including its cathedral, vanished during the Liège Revolution. Similar to the French one, its biggest consequence has been the incorporation of Liège's territory in the French Republic. The rest is history : after the defeat of Napoleon, the powerful of Europe decided to incorporate what would become the Belgium Kingdom in the united province of the Netherlands... Until the Belgian independence. Liège then became a flourishing industrial city, thanks, amongst other things, to the hard work of John Cockerill, an English industrialist raised in Belgium. It is, partially, from there that the city holds its name of "Ardent City", where the fire (of the factories) always burns. The Walloon industrial basin is then the first industrial region of Europe, with its cooking plants, its coal mines and its steel mills.

If Liège is now over its former greatness, it remains one of the main Belgian cities, has the third European river port and is an engine of the Walloon economy. But above all, it is a festive, student and cultural city, whose gastronomic and brewing productions would only be matched by the humor of its inhabitants.

What to do, what to see

The 16th century Palace of the Prince-Bishops: the former house of the rulers of the city is still standing next to the Place Saint-Lambert, the main place of the town where the great cathedral of Liège used to be. This gothic building remains a symbol of power as it now serves as the Courthouse of Liège.

The Liège - Guillemins railway station: the main station of the city, designed by Santiago Calatrava. Modern and urban, with its neofuturistic architecture, the station is now the main entry and a not to be missed monument of the city.

The Curtius museum: Jean Curtius (1551-1628) was one of the important arms merchants of the sixteenth century, and his house remains as proof of his power and influence. The building, with its Renaissance style, now houses one of the largest museums in Liège: The Great Curtius.

The Perron: The Monument on the Place du Marché was once the symbol of justice in the Prince-Bishopric and is now the symbol of the city. It stands in front of the 17th century city hall.

The Royal Opera of Wallonia: this impressive neoclassical building enhanced with a modern annex is located just next to the Place Saint-Lambert.

The Montagne de Bueren: the most extreme staircase in the world, according to the Huffington Post. A 374-step challenge for the lovers of strolls or extreme sports. Perfect place to get fit... Wanna jog it?

What to do, what to see

The Citadel Hillside:

On the slopes of the Citadel of Liège, the hillsides are a set of green spaces and old houses. One of the most peaceful and beautiful places in the city, it is the countryside in the heart of the Ardent City.

The Square:

An entire district with bars. What else?

The Puppet theaters:

One of the many cultural specificities of Liège, a special kind of spectacle that showcases the local folkloric hero: Tchantchès.

The gastronomy:

Belgium, its beer, its chocolate, its BELGIAN fries... Liège has all this and even more. The city is famous for its meatballs-fries and its tradition of great beers, as well as for its food, simple but delicious.

The Peket:

Too much beer for you ? Try the local alcohol, the Pecket, a white alcohol which can be flavored with almost everything.
